...linton's approach to con... one based upon ... and attack, Sen. Bob ... in his address to the Col... ...ans on Thursday night. ...Clinton's entire career ...ctuated by a series of ... didn't inhale, to the ROTC scam, to the draft situation," Bennett said to the receptive crowd. "His career has been built on his ability to lie."

Bennett expressly conveyed that the Clinton controversy has little to do with Monica Lewinsky or perjury, rather it is Clinton's past pattern of deceit. He also expressed his concern this pattern would begin to be the norm among politicians in general.

"The Clinton crisis runs deeper than consentual sex with a woman not his wife, and it runs deeper than perjury before a grand jury or perjury in a civil trial, but there is a character of refusal to tell the truth that runs through everything he does in his presidency and his life," he said.

Bennett said Clinton dodges scandal by stonewalling and attacking.

Even though the Clinton administration claims to be complying with the requests of the committees, Bennett said people involved in the scandals are not talking, a procedure he called stonewalling.

Stonewalling means to deliberately deny any accusation, while claiming cooperation, Bennett said.

SEE THE VIDEO @ newsnet.byu.edu

"The word stonewall used to be a noun. The Nixon administration has turned it into a verb. The Clinton administration has turned it into a fine art," he said.

Bennett said stonewalling is only one tactic the Clinton administration has used. The other is attacking those who could threaten or discredit the administration.

"Stonewall and attack. To me, this is the Clinton crisis," he said.

Bennett gave detailed background on the various controversies that have plagued the Clinton administration.

"I know more about Arkansas than I ever thought I would, or wanted to know," he said.

College Republican students at the lecture said they were supportive of Bennett's position.

Todd McLauchlin, 22, a sophomore in philosophy from Portland, Ore., said, "I felt Senator Bennett was really responsible, and thorough, and gave a good foundation of Clinton's past so we can understand what's happening now."

Matt McGhie, a 33-year-old law student from California, said, "It's pretty hard, when you're caught in a lie, to deny it gracefully, and (Clinton) hasn't been very graceful in his denials."

French teens protest new teachers and class sizes

Associated Press

PARIS — Tens of thousands of high school students took to the streets Thursday across France, keeping up the pressure on the leftist government to cut class sizes and buy more equipment.

The students have been demonstrating off and on for two weeks, demanding action from Education Minister Claude Allegre who has promised to add teachers, computers and otherwise improve conditions. He presented a plan to Cabinet this week. But students say he is not moving quickly enough.

By mid-afternoon, 200,000 students were in the streets in about a dozen cities. At least 20,000 were marching in both Paris and Bordeaux, while 10,000 marched in Rennes and Caen in the north.

Youths smashed windows in Paris and Rouen. In Paris, authorities reported four injuries, including two police officers, and 82 arrests. Both officials and organizers blamed the violence on hooligans who were not part of the protest.

In Grenoble, a student was seriously injured when he broke through a crowd barrier and was struck by a tram, authorities said.

Police were prepared for the worst. Riot police with shields were deployed at the Boulevard du Montparnasse in Paris and along the route to the Education Ministry.

The students shouted slogans criticizing Allegre.

"Allegre, you're finished, the high schools are in the streets," one of them went.

The protest ended in a drizzling rain, with the students dispersing before reaching the Education Ministry. Allegre agreed to meet them later in the day.

A student union leader told France Inter radio that without progress, his federation would march on the National Assembly on Tuesday, the day before a budget vote.

"We'll see what is won or not," said Thibault Cotta, secretary-general of the Independent and Democratic Federation of High School Students.

Bennett visits Provo homes

Utah Senator Robert Bennett toured a Provo neighborhood Thursday in an effort to bring attention to federal programs that give grants to lower-income families.

Neighborhood Housing Service, a non-profit organization that has been working in the Franklin neighborhood since 1994, invited Bennett to see for himself how federal funds have improved conditions among the older homes of downtown Provo.

"We wanted him to see how it really worked, to see real people who've benefited from the programs," NHS Executive Director Linda Linstrum said.

After touring new housing projects and meeting homeowners who have benefited from NHS' loan assistance, Bennett said he was very pleased.

"I'm tremendously impressed and delighted to know that Provo is involved in projects like this. I've seen this work in other neighborhoods in Utah and am glad to see federal funds being used in this way," Bennett said.

The tour began at HomePlace, a six-unit home project NHS built on a run-down property, and went on to Franklin Park Condominimums. The

Pollster predicts low voter turnout

By RYAN RAUZON

Public opinion analysts expect unusually low turnout rates for next month's election.

Traditionally, fewer registered voters cast ballots during non-presidential election years. This year, however, one of Utah's local pollsters is predicting an especially dismal turnout.

Dan Jones said voter apathy and antagonism is the worst he's seen since 1959.

"If the general election were held today, not next month, I think we'd have a turnout of only between 30 and 40 percent in Utah," Jones said.

BYU political science professor Kelly Patterson, however, said it's not unusual to see low voter turnout during non-presidential years.

"The average turnout rate is around 25 percent," Patterson said.

In 1994, the last non-presidential election year, Lt. Governor Olene Walker reported voter turnout at 57 percent.

But Jones insists that problems in Washington, especially with President Clinton's sexual activities, will keep a greater number of Utah voters from casting ballots.

Utah residents can't believe the rest of the country approves of President Clinton's job performance, Jones said.

As a result, residents are starting to distrust pollsters in general, he said.

"I'm finding it's harder polling than at any time since I've been doing it. When most people distrust polls we get higher rejection rates," he said.

Patterson said there has been a general sense of distrust and suspicion in American politics for the last 30 years.

"What Clinton's problems do is they become a highly visible reminder of what citizens don't like about politics," Patterson said, "My guess is you'll have higher rates of cynicism because of that."

Schoeni is the vice president of SAC and he said Q&A gatherings are a good way to see what the students are concerned with and understand where the administration is coming from.

"There are two purposes for these gatherings. One is to inform the students and to help them understand some of the things that are happening. The second reason is to help identify student issues and what students are interested in," Schoeni said.

Students asked questions ranging from whether or not it is OK to study on Sunday to questions about closing down Campus Drive. Students showed an interest in issues such as the construction on campus and what is happening with on-line classes.

President Bateman addressed the issue of the south entrance of the Harold B. Lee Library closing permanently. There were two reasons he gave in support of having only one entrance to the library. One reason was the entrance will eventually be in the middle of the library, and the second reason was for security purposes.

President Bateman said since the library has had only one entrance, there has been a significant decrease in the loss of library materials. One entrance will also cut back on the amount of staffing and equipment needed.

The new library is making room to accommodate the growing student body and President Bateman is planing on making this library a world-wide library. President Bateman said it will be a library for the entire church.

Along with the growing numbers at BYU, class sizes are growing as well.

Crew fixes 'Y' surface; paint job still to come

The Y's facelift team raced storm clouds Thursday afternoon to finish the restoration project before the rain hit. They won — barely.

Just before 3 p.m. Thursday the crew radioed to the base, "we've finished," and rushed to get the equipment down the mountain before the storm came in.

Since Tuesday afternoon, a work crew composed of BYU students, full-time grounds crew and a local contractor have been working on the first big repair job on the Y in 20 years.

Crew members are coating the Y's 32,847 square feet with an inch thick layer of gunnite — a mixture of sand and white cement.

Originally the Y was made up of sand and rocks, but in 1978 gunnite was laid to reenforce the structure and shape of the BYU emblem.

Cult leader, members disappear

DENVER — The leader of a doomsday cult who predicted the destruction of Denver last weekend has vanished along with about 50 of his followers, raising fears they are bent on mass suicide.

Followers of Monte Kim Miller's group, Concerned Christians, have sold their belongings and abandoned their homes. Cult watchers believe the group may be headed to Jerusalem because of Miller's belief he would die there in December 1999 and be resurrected three days later.

Miller founded Concerned Christians in the early 1980s, preaching against the evils of cults and New Age movements.

Hal Mansfield, director of the Fort Collins-based Religious Movement Resource Center, which has been monitoring the Denver-based Concerned Christians for at least two years, said Miller might have started the movement as a financial scam. But critics said the group has transformed itself into an apocalyptic personality cult.

Armless man uses legs in rescue

DURHAM, N.C. — A man without arms rescued an 86-year-old woman from a burning van by kicking in the window and having his wife unlock the door.

Carol Daum, her 3-year-old son Aaron and her mother Elma Snedeker were driving through central Durham on Wednesday to pick up Daum's husband when their 1994 Nissan Quest stalled.

Mrs. Snedeker agreed to stay in the van while her daughter took Aaron to seek help on the rush-hour jammed highway. When they returned, the van was consumed by fire.

"I saw the van in flames, and I just started screaming," Mrs. Daum said. "I thought my mother was dead."

Marty Ravellette had seen the smoke and pulled over. The 58-year-old landscaper, born without arms, asked the woman inside if she could open the van's door.

When Mrs. Snedeker said she couldn't, Ravellette kicked in the driver's side window while his wife reached in, unlocked the door and helped pull the woman out.

6-year-old forgotten at gas station

INDIANAPOLIS — A 6-year-old girl whose parents drove over 200 miles before realizing their daughter was left behind in a gas station bathroom was reunited Thursday afternoon at a secret location.

"They want to do this in privacy and not make this a media event," said Paul Browne, director of the Marion County Children's Guardian's Home, where Hally Ence was being held until her parents, Michael and Gina, returned.

Twelve hours earlier, the Ence family, of Fairview, Utah, stopped at an Indianapolis gas station around 3 a.m. on the way home from a vacation in Massachusetts, said Deputy Chief Bart McAtee of the Marion County Sheriff's Department.

He said attendants inside the station's convenience store saw the mother take two girls into the restroom, but returned to the family's sport-utility vehicle with just one girl.

"They went outside looking for the vehicle and it was gone," McAtee said. The girl reportedly "was fine other than she was extremely scared."

Ritzy Vegas hotel opens more to come

LAS VEGAS — Bellagio — the world's most expensive hotel — opened with fanfare Thursday night, kicking off the start of a megaresort marathon on the Las Vegas Strip.

The evening kicked off with a party for more than 1,500 invited guests who paid $1,000 each to benefit The Foundation Fighting Blindness. Mirage Chairman Steve Wynn has the degenerative eye disease retinitis pigmentosa.

The 36-story, 3,025-room resort replicates a Tuscan village and sits on an 11-acre, 22-million-gallon lake featuring 1,000 fountains that produce spectacular water displays.

A major feature of the resort is the Bellagio Gallery of Fine Art, the showplace for a $300 million collection of fine art Wynne has cornered, featuring works of masters such as Van Gogh, Monet, Renoir and Picasso.

Congress agrees on budg

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton announced the White House reached a deal with Congress Thursday on a $500 billion budget package following compromises on the major issues of education and agriculture.

Clinton interrupted a White House conference on school violence to say, "I got a call that we just concluded our agreement on the budget." The audience in the East Room applauded.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., said he expected a vote on the final compromise late Thursday or Friday.

Acceptance of the agreement by the House and Senate would allow Congress to adjourn for the Nov. 3 elections.

Just hours earlier, Democrats, largely on the sidelines in the talks, had said they wouldn't accept the package without careful scrutiny.

"You cannot short-circuit and push all 535 people out of the room and make the decision between two or three people," said House Democratic leader Dick Gephardt of Missouri. "We are not going to let them run over people's right to understand what's in the bill."

Clinton conceded that his proposal for modernizing school buildings with $5 billion in targeted tax breaks had been dropped in the budget negotiations. He said he would push for it again next year.

Some of the more serious disagreements that were not resolved until the end concerned the 2000 census, family planning and the environment.

A fourth temporary spending bill had to be passed Wednesday, this one running through Friday, to keep government agencies open while negotiations continued on the big budget bill.

But with the deals on education and agriculture, both sides could go home armed with something to brag about. Republicans also touted defense and anti-drug money in saying they said fulfilled their promises to the nation.

Republicans agreed to a Democratic plan announced by Clinton in his State of the Union address in February to provide $1.1 billion to hire 100,000 new elementary school teachers. "Our Democratic priorities clearly prevailed, and I welcome the decision by our Republican colleagues to accept them," said Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.

But Republicans claimed victory by saying their key principle — that educational funding should go directly to local schools rather than through a Washington bureaucracy — was maintained. "It is a huge win for local educators and parents who are fed up with Washington mandates, red tape and regulation," said Rep. Bill Goodling, R-Pa., who is chairman of the House Education and the Workplace Committee.

The measure gives local communities the funds to recruit, hire and train teachers.

Fed interest rates sink to 5.25%

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal Reserve policy-makers Thursday cut short-term interest rates by a quarter-percentage point, the first reduction in nearly three years, in hope of cushioning the U.S. economy from global financial turmoil.

The central bank's monetary policy panel voted to move the benchmark federal funds rate, which banks charge each other on overnight loans, to 5.25 percent from 5.5 percent.

The Fed left its discount rate, which it charges on its own loans to banks, unchanged at 5 percent.

Just after the widely expected cut, the Dow Jones average of industrial stocks fell more than 100 points, but it largely recovered later in the afternoon. Many traders had been hoping for a half-point rather than quarter-point rate reduction. Monday, in anticipation of lower rates, the Dow rose 80 points on top of last week's 133-point gain.

The federal funds rate reduction, the first since January 1996, should be reflected within days in most banks' prime rate for their best business customers. As a result, rates on a wide range of consumer and business loans, from credit cards to auto loans to home-equity lines, should move down as well.

Analysts warned the cut won't entirely insulate Americans from the ongoing global financial crisis. But it could go a long way — if followed by further cuts as expected — to ensuring U.S. consumers keep spending, businesses keep investing and banks keep lending.

"It's sort of like getting a flu shot that doesn't completely work. You still get the flu, but you don't feel as much pain," said economist Bruce Steinberg of Merrill Lynch.

Today's cut was widely expected. In fact, one lender, Southwest Bank of St. Louis, cut its prime rate Friday from 8.5 percent to 8 percent.

Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan last week delivered what economists said was an unambiguous signal the Fed was ready to cut the federal funds rate for the first time since January 1996.

condo complex had replaced some inexpensive tri-plexes.

The final stop on the tour was the home of Franklin neighborhood resident Louise Camphuisen. Camphuisen took advantage of NHS and federal programs when the roof of the home she and her husband own on 800 W. Provo began to leak last summer.

"I was putting pots and pans all over the house to catch the leaks and finally I said to my husband, 'If we don't get this fixed, I'm moving.' And of course he knew there was no place for us to move," she said.

SEE THE VIDEO @ newsnet.byu.edu

Since the couple was retired and living on Social Security, there was no money to pay for repairs, either.

A friend referred the Camphuisens to NHS, where they were able to get assistance with a placing a lien on their home and taking out a $15,000 interest-free loan to replace the roof, repour the driveway cement, and perhaps put in a sprinkler system.

Bennett congratulated Camphuisen on the improvements to her home and restated his support of the home improvement efforts.

"This is an important project. It's good to see what it does to people," he said.

Neighborhood Housing Service works on the principle that the quality of older neighborhoods can be maintained by promoting home ownership, financing home improvement, and encouraging quality housing development.

"In older neighborhoods people let the area go, and you see a higher crime rate, with lots of renters so the homes are not own-er ooccupied and they're getting run down. We try and prevent that by revitalizing the neighborhoods," NHS Program Coordinator Kena Mathews said.

"You see it all the time in big cities, where surrounding neighborhoods become neglected and run-down. We don't want that to happen in Provo," Mathews said.

Using money from the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation, private contributors and city and federal grants, NHS offers financial assistance to families with incomes between 80 percent and 115 percent of the Area Median Income.

That income, which is determined by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, varies depending on family size and other circumstances, Mathews said. Families with incomes below 80 percent of the AMI are referred to the City of Provo.

NHS offers first-time mortgages at competitive rates, home improvement loans, and operates a Down Payment Assistance Program.

President Bateman addressed the issue of on-line classes and the enrichment the Internet would add.

BYU now has 25 on-line classes and hopes to reach 50 by the end of the year. President Bateman and the administration are trying to find ways to make "the BYU experience" more accessible to more people.

"All of the classes that are currently now independent study classes are being upgraded and converted for on-line use," President Bateman said.

Provo majoring in political science, is one of several students organizing the KBYU exit poll.

Cannon said voters are disgusted with President Clinton's behavior. He said negative sentiment will register in poll results.

"It doesn't hurt our credibility, but if fewer people agree to take the exit poll then we've got a greater margin of error. It won't be a true sample of voters' feelings on election day," Cannon said.

Patterson said there is no proof that an increasing number of national poll results will make Americans more suspicious of the polling enterprise in general, but admits the polling industry worries about saturation.

"There is direct evidence that shows people are less willing to cooperate with pollsters in heavy-polling areas," Patterson said.

Provo ice arena dons new name

By SETH SAUNDERS
seth@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Along with its new facilities, the ice arena at Seven Peaks has a new name, The Peaks Ice Arena.

Provo City officials made the final vote on the name at a council meeting Wednesday morning. Under the policy between the city and Seven Peaks, a new name and logo had to be approved before it could be implemented. Director of marketing and sales for The Peaks, Mike Russell, said this approval will now allow The Peaks to begin a huge marketing campaign.

"We are very excited for the approval and the new look," Russell said. "We will be a very a competitive ice arena, not only in presentation but price also."

This arena will be used during the 2002 Olympic Games for hockey. At this time, the city has been told that they will host at least one medal game, according to Provo City Mayor Lewis Billings.

The Salt Lake Olympic Committee will take over the arena on Dec. 15, 2001, and have it until April 15, 2002, Russell said.

"We will be giving up the keys to our own offices," Russell said. "They will have complete control of the arena and the water park."

The Peaks has sold all its ice time from opening through the month of November, Russell said.

"If the need is there, we will open our doors 24 hours a day in order to accommodate all those that want to use the facility," Russell said.

Both BYU and UVSC students that sign up for PE 150 will be using this arena for their classes, Russell said.

"We are hoping to add another class to the curriculum for ice hockey at BYU," Russell said. "We have searched all around to hire the highest quality instructors that we can."

With its new look, The Peaks will now focus on getting people to the arena. In order for the Winter Olympics to be successful, Russell said they must prove to Olympic Officials that the people of the valley will be supportive of this undertaking.

Who will use the arena

- BYU and UVSC's PE 150
- Both BYU's and UVSC's hockey teams
- Olympic women's hockey team
- Possible plans for little league hockey
- Both skating arenas open to the public starting Jan. 1, 1999.

Summit convenes for Mideast peace

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton kicked off a Mideast peace summit Thursday by calling on the Israeli and Palestinian leaders to "break the logjam" over a U.S. proposal for a West Bank settlement.

"We must remember as we come together again that, in the end, peace is more than a process; it is, in the end, a destination," Clinton said in a statement in the Rose Garden after meeting privately for 42 minutes with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

Flanked by the two leaders, Clinton said the negotiations Thursday afternoon at a rustic retreat on Maryland's Eastern Shore were being undertaken with a sense of urgency after a year and a half of stalemate. Clinton was flying there to convene the summit's formal opening, then returning to the White House, leaving Secretary of State Madeleine to oversee the weekend talks. Aides said Clinton was not scheduled to rejoin the negotiators but would do so if it would help.

"This week's talks at Wye River offer the chance for the parties to break the logjam and finally take the next essential steps for peace," Clinton said. Although there was no timetable, officials said the talks most likely would run through Sunday.

In separate remarks to reporters, Netanyahu and Arafat pledged their best efforts at compromise, while cautioning that neither side should enter the negotiations with unrealistic expectations.

Netanyahu, speaking to a pack of reporters in the White House driveway before departing for Wye River, said Israelis want first and foremost assurances that the Palestinians will "fight terrorism in word and deed."

"We come with the best intentions and we hope that there will be an accord. We're asked to give additional territory; we want to ensure that this territory doesn't become a base and a haven for terrorists to attack us as happened before."

Arafat promised the Palestinians would give a "100 percent effort" at Wye. "But no one in the world can give 100 percent results."

With the approach of a May deadline for completing a full Israeli-Palestinian peace accord, U.S. officials expressed hope for untangling the complex web of issues on both sides, to set the stage for a final peace deal. A breakthrough also would be a welcome diplomatic triumph for Clinton amid his impeachment travails.

Time is pressing because Arafat has said he will unilaterally declare a Palestinian state next May if there is no final peace.

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright told The Associated Press Thursday, "There has to be a verifiable way of knowing there is security in the region," She, Arafat and Netanyahu headed for Wye River after the White House meeting with Clinton.

In his Rose Garden remarks, Clinton cautioned that both sides must be ready to make compromises.

"As in any difficult problem, neither side can expect to win 100 percent of every point," Clinton said. "But concessions that seem hard now will seem far less important in the light of an accord that moves Israelis and Palestinians closer to lasting peace."

Under a U.S. plan that Netanyahu and Arafat will discuss, Israeli troops would withdraw from a further 13 percent of the West Bank, giving Palestinians a measure of control of 40 percent of the territory.

Albright said Thursday that the Clinton administration, working with Israel, is developing "a parallel process" in which security measures by the Palestinians would be coordinated with an Israeli pullback on the West Bank.

She called security the essential "building block" of the agreement the administration is trying to nail down and said "there has to be a lot of effort" by the Palestinians to back up promises to combat terrorism.

Clinton intended to keep a close eye on the talks but has put the onus on Arafat and Netanyahu to wrap up what is considered only an interim step toward a final peace accord.

Polynesian dancers perform. The First annual Polynesian Fest will demonstrate dances, crafts, tattoo painting and lavalava tying. This fest celebrates October as the Polynesian/Pacific Islander Month.

Step out to island fest

Polynesian cultures are sometimes full of mysteries to non-islanders.

The Campus Life Diversity Committee is sponsoring Polynesian/ Pacific Islander Month to unfold some of the mysteries and to celebrate the Polynesian culture.

The first Polynesian Fest will be Saturday afternoon in the Wilkinson Center Terrace from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. and will feature six Pacific islands.

Jim Slaughter, multicultural counselor, is helping to plan the festival.

"We wanted to do something more interactive than what has been done in the past," Slaughter said.

The Polynesian Fest will have 17 booths featuring the culture, dress, food and crafts from Tahiti, Hawaii, Samoa, Tonga, New Zealand and Fuji.

Amiee Fetui, 21, from Maryland, majoring in accounting, is the vice president of the Polynesian Club and one of the organizers of the festival.

"Polynesian culture has a lot of similarities, but each island is unique. This is a chance to get to know each country," Fetui said.

There will be traditional tattoo painting using temporary tattoos, instructions on constructing both flower and candy leis, how to tie lava lavas, basic dance steps taught, and many other crafts will be demonstrated, Fetui said.

The traditional island dances will be performed by natives from the Islands.

Tammy Malae, 20, a junior majoring in political science, and her sister Bethany, 18, a sophomore majoring in biology, both from American Samoa, will be performing at the festival.

"In Samoan dance, you just make up the dance combinations as you go, so each dance is unique," Tammy said.

"There is so much culture in this school," Bethany said. "This is a way to inform people of the wonderful Polynesian culture."

Following the Polynesian Fest, a dance will be held in the W.W. Clyde Engineering Building lounge from 8 to 11:30 p.m.

It will feature Lep Dawg and is $2 with a BYU student ID and $3 without.

Other activities for Polynesian Month include free Polynesian dance lessons on Oct. 22 and Oct. 29 at 6 p.m. in 3228 ELWC. Bill Kelly, who teaches Polynesian Dance on campus, will be the instructor.

Mili McQuivey, the Polynesian Club Advisor, said this is a great opportunity to learn.

A student panel discussion regarding issues facing Polynesians will be Oct. 22 at 11 a.m. in 3380 ELWC.

COMPUTER CRIME

On Oct. 8 around 4 p.m. at Cougar Creations, an employee saw an individual in the multimedia lab copying commercial program files onto a disk. The employee confronted the student about copyright and license laws. The student admitted he was doing something wrong. The student has been referred to the Honor Code Office.

Between 11:30 p.m. Saturday and 1:30 a.m. Sunday, a student in V-hall was working on his computer, when he noticed it was acting up. His cursor also began to move around the screen without him touching anything. The student opened his notepad program and sent a question to the person for identification. He immediately received a message back telling him "we're controlling your computer." The student didn't know how his computer was accessed but police said some of his e-mail addresses might have been downloaded. The case is still under investigation.

TRESPASS

Around 3 a.m. Sunday at Cougar Stadium, a University police officer noticed two male BYU students climbing over the stadium fence. The students were smoking at Cougar Stadium. Both students have been referred to the Honor Code Office for trespassing and possession of tobacco.

THEFT

A student left his bicycle parked in a rack at Wymount Terrace over the weekend. When he returned to get his bike on Tuesday, it was gone. The bike is a royal blue, 21-speed, Schwinn Highplains mountain bike with a mileage computer on the handlebars. Total value for the bike is $150.

ACCIDENT

Thursday around 10 p.m., on East Campus Drive near the Wilkinson Center, a University Police officer witnessed a biker fall in front of a car. The driver said he checked the traffic and proceeded to pull out onto the street, when he saw the cyclist fall in front of his car.

There were no injuries.

The only damage that was done was a black tire mark on the car's front bumper.

LEWD CONDUCT

On Monday at 4:30 p.m. an 18 year-old woman was sitting on a couch near the east end of the Wilkinson Center, when a man sat down next to her on the bench and pretended to study.

Later on, the victim noticed the man squirming around and then he turned to her and exposed himself. The victim got up to leave when the man asked for her name.

She left and called police. Police searched the area for the suspect and found him talking to another woman. The victim positively identified the suspect and police arrested him for lewd conduct.

The suspect is a 24-year-old student. He was cited on a misdemeanor and referred to the Honor Code Office.

If you have never been on a blind date before, there is a great chance this weekend to try it.

The Vision Beyond Sight Club is sponsoring the showing of a free movie, "Beethoven," tonight at 6:45 p.m. in 2084 JKHB. The movie has been specially modified for the visually impaired.

The film contains an extra soundtrack which describes actions on the screen to visually impaired viewers.

The club encourages everyone to attend and to wear blindfolds so they can experience the film the same way, but it is not mandatory to wear a blindfold to participate in the activity.

The movie is an opportunity for interaction between club members and the rest of the student body, said club president C.J. Sampson, 23, a senior from Sunnyvale, Calif., majoring in English.

"The club is trying to better integrate the blind with the sighted BYU community," Sampson said.

This is the second movie-for-the-blind the club has sponsored.

Last year the club showed "Apollo 13."

Club advisor Alan Chipman said this activity is consistent with the three major goals of the club, which are to aide the visually impaired through service, create awareness of the challenges of visually impaired students and have fun.

"The club is designed to have friends helping friends and to get to know the people that you're serving," Chipman said.

Julie Preece, coordinator of Services for Student with Physical Disabilities, said the club is a valuable resource at BYU.

"I think the club is a great idea. Any time there is a club that adds cohesiveness among students and gives them a chance for leadership, I think it is a great thing," Preece said.

Y physics event starts

For the first time ever BYU is hosting the Four Corners section meeting of the American Physical Society.

The annual conference will begin tonight at 8 p.m. in the Provo Marriott Hotel Arches Room and continue tomorrow at 8:30 a.m. in the N. Eldon Tanner Building Atrium.

Kip S. Thorne, California Technical Institute professor of physics, is beginning the two-day conference with a dissertation entitled Gravitation Waves: A New Window on the Universe.

Thorne will be discussing his involvement in constructing two large gravitation wave detectors.

Kent Harrison, professor of physics said, "Cal Tech and MIT are currently working on the project to build the detectors and they will be going into operation within the next few years."

Professors from Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico and Utah will also participate in the conference and discuss current aspects in the world of physics including: evidence for neutrino oscillations, Hubble Telescope images and global mirror discoveries.

Steve Turley, associate professor of physics, said the conference will be filled with presentations and demonstrations by BYU graduate and undergraduate students.

"The conference includes interesting talks concerning hot topics in physics. Those in attendance will have the opportunity to meet professors in the physics department and other members of the field from other states," Turley said.

Those who are not members of the American Physical Society must register to participate in the Saturday morning events. Registration begins today in the Tanner Building Atrium from noon to 1 p.m.

Student registration fees are $5. A $45 registration fee is required for non-students who want to participate.

Funeral set for former professor

NewsNet Services

Funeral services for Max L. Waters, who died Wednesday of cancer, will be Saturday at 2 p.m. at the Pleasant View Chapel in Provo. He was 66.

Waters was a BYU professor who taught management communications and other courses in the Marriott School of Management for 39 years.

Waters received his bachelor's degree in education in 1958 and his master's degree in education in 1960, both from BYU.

He later earned his doctoral degree in education from Colorado State College.

Paul Timm, former department head of management communications, said, "He was a wonderful man, extremely well-liked."

"His greatest contribution as an educator was in travelling all over the world speaking at education week," said Michael Thompson, current department head of management communications.

"He was known for going the extra mile for his students," Thompson said.

Friends may call on the family Friday from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. at Walker Sanderson Funeral Home in Orem, or Saturday from 12:30 p.m. to 1:45 p.m. at the Pleasant View Chapel.

had deteriorated over the years and the Y needed to be repaired and brought up to date. He said he expects the new layer to preserve the Y for a long time.

"We hope it will last a lot more than 20 years," Peterman said, "we hope it will last for 50."

Peterman said danger is a big factor in the project.

"As you can see with all the equipment it's not something you'd tackle with your wheelbarrow and shovel," he said. "It's a lot of work and it's dangerous."

Workers get to the Y on the same trail as hikers do. But the hiking path was temporarily enlarged with permission from the forest service. The wider trail allows service vehicles access to the top of the Y.

Twelve cement trucks brought 46 cubic yards of gunnite from the Geneva plant to the base of the mountain. The gunnite was taken up to the spraying machine at the top of the Y in one-ton trucks. The workers had to rush against time since they only had two hours from the time the trucks left the plant to the time the mixture went through the gunnite machine. If they didn't work quickly enough the mixture would be too hard to go through the machine.

Peterman said the white Y will return in 10 to 14 days after the surface cures and the grounds crew can repaint it. But there is no guarantee. "That all depends on Mother Nature," he said.

The paint is taken up in four wheelers and Peterman said the job usually takes about six hours. The Y was last painted about a year ago but vandalism and regular wear make frequent re-painting necessary.

Latin Fiesta returns to Provo

By JULIA OLSEN
julia@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

For the third year in a row, the Latin American Fiesta will bring the Provo community together for a celebration in cultural diversity.

This year's fiesta will be tonight from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. at the Maeser Elementary School at 550 N. 600 East.

Organizers hope the fiesta will bring the many different cultures in Provo together, to create more unity in the community.

Featured at the fiesta will be a local band, Los Hermanos de los Andres. The band specializes in music from the mountain regions of South America.

"Los Hermanos de los Andres performed at the fiesta before and they were superb," said Norma Gonzoles, who helps organize the fiesta.

Gonzoles also said they hope to have more than 1,000 people attend this year.

"You can learn so much from other cultures," Gonzoles said. "The more you learn about other people, the better you can appreciate them."

Martha Winsor and Julia Jacob have also been involved in planning the fiesta since the first year.

Both Winsor and Jacob said that they want the community to bond through the fiesta.

"I'm concerned about the community's image of the Hispanics," Jacob said.

"I hope people will come and see the beauty that we have in our culture," Jacob said.

Involving elementary students from three different schools in Provo has added a new element to this year's fiesta.

"It's important for the children to know and appreciate their heritage from Latin America," Winsor said.

Jacob said that an estimated one-third of the students at Maeser Elementary are Hispanic.

In the past, the fiesta was held at a high school, to raise money for the senior trip.

Winsor said they began looking for a Parent-Teacher Association that would be interested in sponsoring the fiesta this year.

Maeser Elementary's PTA and principal were excited about the fiesta and wanted to make it a community based activity.

Gonzoles also said in the future the fiesta could become an international celebration, representing the diversity in Provo.

The fiesta costs $1 at the door Gonzoles said.

Choir earns standing ovation

By JULIA OLSEN
julia@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

BYU audiences love Mack Wilberg.

The entire audience stood to applaud Wilberg, the BYU Concert Choir and the Utah Symphony for Wednesday's excellent performance in the de Jong Concert Hall of the Harris Fine Arts Center.

Wilberg conducted the choir through a variety of challenging religious pieces.

The impressive choir was accompanied by selected members of the Utah Symphony.

The showering applause after the first selection, George Frideric Handel's "Utrecht Jubilate," foreshadowed the course of the evening.

Besides Handel, the choir and orchestra also performed Gustav Holst's arrangement of Psalms 86 and 148.

Wilberg and the performers handled "Utrecht Jubilate" with outstanding magnificence.

Handel's masterpiece itself has a powerful message, much like his "Messiah," and the performance only added to it.

The soloists chosen for the parts in "Be ye sure that the Lord He is God" and "For the Lord is gracious: Adagio" perfectly complimented each other.

Concert Review

The choir continued, in powerful supplication, with Psalms 86 and 148.

Through the two selections, Wilberg displayed his control and the performers willingly followed.

The orchestra neither overshadowed nor underplayed its responsibility. Together, the choir and the orchestra were a marriage in harmony.

Psalm 86, peaceful and prayer-like, was contrasted by the gradual crescendo of Psalm 148 set to the familiar tune of "All Creatures of Our God and King."

Leonard Bernstein's composition, "Chichester Psalms," was a practice in discordant sounds, interjected with some beautiful harmony.

The most impressive part of the program was the soloist in "Chichester Psalms." The soloist, Michael Denos, is a 12-year-old soprano.

Denos, a native Utahn, has traveled and performed extensively throughout Europe and is destined for a bright future.

The finale was "Four Hymns in a Popular Style" arranged by John Gardner. One of those hymns,"Savior, Again to Thy Dear Name We Raise," was excellent.

For those who regret missing the performance, it will be repeated tonight at Peery's Egyptian Theater in Ogden. Call (801) 399-9214 for ticket information.

Love of music unites siblings

By AMBER STAHR
amber@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The love of music has turned lifelong sibling rivalry into local music group Sibling Revelry.

The three siblings of the group have been singing together since birth, but officially as a group for three years, said Skye Pixton, a junior from Portland, Ore., majoring in humanities.

All three members of the group have a great love for music.

"If I didn't have music in my life, I would go crazy," said Courtney Pixton Atack, a senior from Portland majoring in vocal music performance.

"I don't feel like I am good at expressing myself through words," Atack said. "Music is a huge outlet for me."

Skye said that music explores the part of the soul that no one else can reach.

"I think everyone has some means of expression," Skye said. "For me it's music."

"I think music is a means of transmitting spirit," said Clayton Pixton, a senior from Portland majoring in philosophy. "Whatever spirit that may be: good, bad, happy, sad."

Music has a power to bring the listener into the spirit in which the music was originally written, Clayton said.

When they were younger, the entire family sang together as the Pixton family singers, Atack said.

Since they formed Sibling Revelry, they have dedicated their singing to their own music. Each sibling contributes to the song writing, Skye said.

The group doesn't have a particular agenda in what they write their songs about, Clayton said.

The lyrics of their music are based on life experiences, Atack said. Sibling Revelry sings music with tight three part harmony, said Atack, who added that their voices blend well together because they have the same genes.

The group released its first, self-titled, CD April 1997.

They have plans to release their second CD by the end of the 1998-99 school year.

Y looks to ruin Rainbows

By MICHAEL MILLER
miller@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

BYU faces its third consecutive winless opponent Saturday as the Cougars travel 3,000 miles to the Aloha State to take on the Hawaii Rainbows. In the process, BYU hopes to end its six-game road losing streak in a very distracting locale.

With its beautiful beaches and stunning scenery, the island paradise has been known to lull many mainland teams, including the Cougars, into a deep haze. Though the Cougars have won the last two in Honolulu, they lost three before that, twice with Ty Detmer at quarterback.

"There's four hours time difference and it's a long flight," BYU head coach LaVell Edwards said.

"Then, once you're over there, there are so many distractions. And the heat and humidity plays a part. The combination of all those factors make it a difficult place to play."

BYU left for the Islands on Wednesday afternoon to enjoy some relaxation time as well as hold some extra practices. The Cougars will hold three practices before Saturday's game at Aloha Stadium.

"The kids look forward to it," he said. "It's always unique when you go to Hawaii. It's a nice trip, but we have to work at keeping them focused on business."

Edwards said that the coaches are using the Fresno State loss as a reminder of what can happen if they aren't focused on the road.

"Conference games are different and the game at Hawaii is going to be a very tough, very hard game for us and we simply have to be ready to play," he said.

If BYU combines its practice time and fun time, it could be a very fun weekend for the Cougars.

"We've got to be able to flip that switch on and off," strong linebacker Derik Stevenson said. "When we hop on the bus to go to practice, we've got to flip the switch on and get mentally focused and know when it's time to play (football) and when it's time to have a good time."

BYU center Jimmy Richards agreed with Stevenson and said the Cougars need to maintain focus.

"Our number one priority has to be to win, to go and establish something from the get-go," Richards said. "We have to establish ourselves early and show that we're there for business."

"We can't slip up or mess up against the Rainbows," Stevenson said. "It's kind of hard going into a game when you're playing somebody that's 0-5. All I'm worried about is trying to shut them out and dominate them defensively," he said.

Although Hawaii (0-5, 0-3 WAC), is one of the worst teams in the country, the Rainbows seem to play the Cougars well, especially on the Islands, where they have won three of the last five meetings.

The Cougars remain a big rival of the Rainbows' because BYU recruits some of Hawaii's best players. Six are on BYU's roster this year, including starting offensive tackle Joe Wong, who started 12 games for the Rainbows in 1995 before transferring.

After falling to San Diego State 35-13 on Oct. 9, the Rainbows enter Saturday's game with an 11-game losing streak that began when BYU beat them last year.

Hawaii's offense has been awful this year. It is last in the WAC in scoring and 112th in the nation. The Rainbows offense averages eight points a game and in five games, Hawaii has scored just five touchdowns.

The Rainbows have particularly struggled at home. Hawaii's offense has only mustered six points total all year in Aloha Stadium, having been shutout in its last two home games by Arkansas State and SMU.

Hawaii's quarterback is junior Dan Robinson, who has completed 47 percent of his passes this season. This year, Robinson has thrown four touchdowns and three interceptions.

His primary receivers are Wesley Morris and Dwight Carter. Morris has been Hawaii's most reliable receiver this season, leading the team with 27 catches for 375 yards.

The Rainbow defense is not as horrendous as its offense. Hawaii is ranked 73rd in rushing defense and 83rd in passing defense. On average, its defense gives up 356 yards in offense per game.

Injured quarterback Drew Miller will accompany the team to Hawaii and "should be all right," according to coach Edwards.

"A lot of it will depend on when he'll be able to start throwing," Edwards said.

Miller, who made his home debut against Hawaii last year, reinjured his right shoulder against UNLV last week, separating it more severely than he had the previous week.

Saturday's game kicks off at 10 p.m. on KSL-TV, Channel 5.

Senior All-American Shauna Rohbock scored the only goal as BYU's women's soccer team pulled out a 1-0 win against San Jose State in California Thursday night.

"The game wasn't as close as it looked," BYU head coach Jennifer Rockwood said. "We played extremely well in the first half ... we should have put the game away early on."

Rohbock netted the game's only goal at the 11-minute mark, scoring off an assist from junior forward Karen Robbins.

The Cougars failed to come out as strong in the second half.

"We played okay (in the second half)," Rockwood said.

"We got to a point where I think we started panicking because we only had a 1-0 lead, and we lost momentum."

BYU dominated the game offensively, taking 17 shots on goal in the first half. They had 29 for the game,

Owners mull NBA players' propo

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The NBA players union's luxury tax proposal won't give the owners much extra revenue.

In fact, in the proposal's present form, union president Patrick Ewing is the only player under contract for the 1998-99 season with a salary big enough to trigger the tax.

The league's negotiating team spent Wednesday studying the union's proposal to see if it will actually slow the growth of player salaries.

"We're plugging in the numbers and considering a counterproposal," NBA chief legal counsel Jeffrey Mishkin said.

Under the union's offer, a 50 percent tax would be levied on the amount of any annual salary over $18 million. The tax money would be redistributed to low-revenue teams.

Ewing is due to make $18.5 million, meaning $500,000 of his salary would qualify for the 50 percent tax. Last season, only Ewing ($20.5 million) and Michael Jordan ($33 million) had salaries that would have triggered the tax, so a middle ground would need to be negotiated to make a tax palatable to the owners.

"The numbers are negotiable," union attorney Jeffrey Kessler said.

If the owners latch onto the concept and adopt the tax system in a counterproposal Friday, it could signal that the sides have found an acceptable mechanism for solving the biggest rift between them — a new economic operating system for the next collective bargaining agreement.

"We are going to examine every element of this tax to see whether under some circumstance, at the right levels and in the right amounts, a tax could work," commissioner David Stern said.

The lockout is now 3 1/2 months old, and the league took the unprecedented step Tuesday of canceling the first two weeks of the regular season.

New York Knicks president Dave Checketts, a member of the owners' negotiating committee, suggested Wednesday the work stoppage could last a long time.

"If we learned anything from baseball (the strike of 1994-95), it is that we must keep them out as long as it takes. They didn't hold them out long enough," Checketts said. "And as a result, even though baseball had a major comeback, we know that baseball is going to lose somewhere in the neighborhood of $100 million this year."

"Even though we'd like to say we learned from baseball — what they did to the World Series and when they went through this long labor situation, it ruined the sport," said Checketts, whose comments appeared in today's New York Times and New York Post. "It ruined fan interest. People were angry at the game. But the reality is, once they had incurred that damage, the mistake they made was coming back too soon, perhaps, and not getting a labor agreement that would carry them into the next century."

Union director Billy Hunter issued a statement in response:

"Our players desperately want to play ball. The fans want us to play. But apparently the owners want to shut down, according to Mr. Checketts," Hunter said. "It's unfortunate and very apparent from his remarks that the NBA and its owners will stop any nothing short of breaking the union and the morale of the players."

Both sides are awaiting a ruling from arbitrator John Feerick on the union's grievance over whether more than 200 players with guaranteed contracts should be paid during the lockout.

Feerick's decision, which could have a major impact on tions, is due by Sunday.

Y Rugby punishes UVSC

By WAYNE ARBALLO
wayne@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

Simply punishing is the best to describe Thursday night's rugby match between UVSC and BYU at Helaman Field.

However, the heavy scoring by BYU in the 45-0 win did not reflect the tough challenge UVSC presented as the team took it hard to the Cougars.

"They were a fairly scrappy team," said BYU head coach Dave Smyth. "They had about five or six guys that were fairly experienced, and when you get somebody like that they can usually pick areas of the game where they can spoil and prevent you from doing what you want to do."

Although the game was dominated by BYU's forwards, they were made to earn every point as UVSC's line toughened each time the Cougars closed in to score.

But the well experienced Cougars made adjustments as the opportunities presented themselves, scoring consistently throughout the game.

"I think the forwards played well," said fly-half Glen Hubert. "Whenever we have a wet game like this the idea is to actually keep it with the forwards and keep it a tight game."

BYU's strength appears to be in its ability to execute and move the ball. This in addition to the mix of experience from the coaching staff and mix of international players on the team have helped position BYU No. 4 in the nation.

However, it's No. 1 UC Berkeley and No. 2 Stanford University which weigh on the Cougars minds at this time. These two powerhouse schools will meet up with BYU next semester.

In contrast to Stanford's' rugby stadium, the only drawback is that the normally used South Field will not be available, leaving Helaman Field as the Cougars' home field.

Boise State will visit BYU next week as the Cougars look to improve their record to 2-0.

Lacrosse favored in first season tourney

By GREG GIAUQUE
greg@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

Lacrosse is back.

The BYU men's lacrosse team, 1998 club national champion runner-up, officially begins it's quest for the 1999 title by hosting the 10-team Annual Fall Tournament Saturday at the Deseret Towers field.

Utah schools fielding teams include Weber State, Utah State, Utah and UVSC. Colorado State, Colorado, Colorado School of Mines and Fort Lewis College will also play. BYU, two-time defending Rocky Mountain Intercollegiate Lacrosse League champions, will supply both an A and B team to round out the field.

The Cougars warmed up for the tournament with a scrimmage against UVSC last week, and head coach Jason Lamb said the outing showed his team is playing up to its capabilities.

"The kids played real hard and smart," Lamb said. "UVSC is new and we're excited that they are getting better, so I was excited that we were disciplined and played smart. It was a good game all the way around."

Lamb said the team's focus in preparing for the tournament has been three-fold.

"We're focusing on our team unity, our conditioning and a little bit of field sense," Lamb said. "We feel like our offense and defense are doing their job. We're just filling in the cracks."

Club All-American Matt Davis said the team is coming together well.

"We have a lot of new players — a new goalie, and some freshman," Davis said. "This year we've got some more depth. Our second string talent is a lot better. My role as a captain is to be a good example and to be a leader."

Freshman attacker Jordan Peel, one of four freshman who Lamb said will see significant time, said he's looking forward to the brewing rivalry with Colorado and Colorado State.

"Hopefully we'll see Colorado State in the championship game," Peel said. "There's a long rivalry there. It should be a lot of fun and a tough game."

Veteran defenseman Jon Lee said the rivalry is about as good they can find these days. BYU beat Colorado State in the national semifinals last year, and Lamb said Colorado is always competitive.

"We're looking to win (the tournament). It will be a good way to see how far we have come this fall," Lee said. "We had a good week of practice. We'll see how good (the defense) really is. It's a lot better than when we started."

The Cougars face off at 11 a.m. against the winner of the Weber State/Utah State game. If they continue to win, they will play again at 2 p.m. in the semifinal and 5 p.m. for the championship.

Tigers remove interim from Parrish's job title

Associated Press

DETROIT — Detroit Tigers interim manager Larry Parrish has accepted a two-year deal as manager.

"I was really wanting this opportunity," Parrish said today by telephone from his home in Haines City, Fla. "Now that you've got it, it's a put up or shut up kind of thing."

Parrish, who beat out more experienced Davey Johnson for the job, will sign a contract that has him managing through the 2000 season. The club has an option for him to continue in 2001.

Financial terms were not disclosed, who stepped in as interim manager after the Tigers fired Buddy Bell on Sept. 1. The club had a 13-12 record under him.

General manager Randy Smith said the job Parrish did in the last days of the season helped him win the job.

"After a rough start, they relaxed and played better for LP," Smith said in a conference call. "They were letting their natural ability take over and not worrying about making mistakes, so they didn't make as many."

Smith said the fact that the Tigers are still a young club also weighted heavily in the decision.

"I think you look at it as different men for different jobs," Smith said. "Davey has outstanding credentials. But we're still pushing the ball up the mountain.

In the closing days of the season, the young Tigers recorded three straight comeback victories — one over Toronto and two over Minnesota.

The players clearly were feeling relaxed and having fun. None more so than Damion Easley, who hit dramatic homers in all three wins.

"It goes back to LP," Easley said. "He's keeping us relaxed and loose. We're playing better because of LP. He's a confident person, and when you feel that from your manager, you'll have a chance to be the same way. He's done a good job with us."

The 44-year-old Parrish has been with the Tigers for seven seasons, managing at four minor league stops. He made it clear after taking over for Bell on that he wanted a shot at the job full time.

Since playing the Cougars, Utah State has notched some impressive wins. Cougar victims such as the Colorado State Rams and the University of Colorado Buffaloes have also been stampeded by the tough Aggie squad. They squashed Utah 7-1.

Utah State captain and goalkeeper Danny Main said his team puts a big emphasis on the BYU-Utah State game.

"It's probably the biggest rivalry," Main said. "We always look forward to playing BYU. (Beating BYU) would be a huge win for Utah State soccer."

Although the Cougars have never lost to the Aggies, the rivalry is still a competitive one. Games between the two teams have traditionally been low-scoring, defensive battles.

"We've never really blown them out," Bailey said. "They've never beaten us and they really want to."

Bailey said the Cougars will need to withstand the early Aggie attack and retain ball possession to win the game.

"They always seem to try and come out physical," Bailey said. "If we can weather the early storm we'll be alright. Our main key is just that we possess the ball ... then we'll wear them down."

Shaq accused of battery by Disney worker

Associated Press

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — A Disney World employee has accused Shaquille O'Neal of grabbing her by the neck on the resort's grounds and has filed a battery complaint against the NBA star, authorities said today.

Kim Grant, the 23-year-old employee, was not injured. No charges have been filed and the offense would be a misdemeanor, said Deputy Miguel Pagan, a spokesman for the Orange County sheriff's office.

The complaint was filed Tuesday and Pagan said an investigator has not yet been assigned the case. His office will try to speak with both parties and report to the state attorney, who will decide whether to charge the Los Angeles Lakers center.

Grant said she notified Disney security, but no report was filed. She said she also informed management at B.E.T. Soundstage, where she was approached by O'Neal and two men Oct. 5.

Grant said she was standing outside the entrance to B.E.T. Soundstage at Disney's Pleasure Island when the 7-foot-1 player asked her name and inquired if she had friends.

The woman said she tried to end the conversation after O'Neal and the men told her they were "going to look for girls," according to the complaint.

Grant told authorities that she told O'Neal, "Be my guest." At that point, O'Neal grabbed her by the neck, pulled her to him and said, "I was just playing. Can't you take a joke?" according to the complaint. O'Neal, she added, then held her by the arm and wouldn't let go until she threatened to file charges.

Alleged love affair sets inmates free

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — A Beaver County corrections officer has been fired and faces criminal charges after allegedly setting free a pair of prison inmates, including a convicted killer.

Department of Corrections spokesman Jack Ford said the officer was believed to have been having a relationship with one of the inmates.

Beaver County sheriff's Lt. Mark Ewart said the guard was arrested, booked into jail and then released on her own recognizance. He refused to identify her and said a criminal investigation is underway.

Prison officials said Wednesday they had arranged for protection for the ex-wife of one of the escapees, fearing that he may be bent on kidnapping his 4-year-old son. The family of the other inmate's victim also is "scared to death" and has been offered protection, Ford said.

Corrections has opened a statewide manhunt for Jason Richard Garcia and Brady R. Antonich. Garcia was serving a one-to-15 year term for manslaughter stemming from the 1993 shooting death of his ex-girlfriend.

Antonich was serving a five-year-to-life term for armed robbery.

"We're considering these men armed and dangerous. They're both violent offenders," Ford said.

The inmates were being housed in the newly opened, 196-bed Beaver County Jail, which contracts with the state to house up to 150 convicts.

But the jail's state-of-the-art security system was worthless because the men apparently walked to freedom through a door left unlocked by the guard, Ford said.

Ford said the corrections officer, a woman hired by the sheriff's office in 1997, apparently was involved in a relationship with Antonich. She is a single mother who lives in Minersville, he said.

The guard went so far as to forge jail head-count documents to hide the escapes, which occurred sometime Tuesday night. They weren't discovered until Wednesday afternoon when the jail performed an inmate-by-inmate head count and came up two prisoners short, Ewart said.

"They were gone for between 12 and 14 hours before we even knew it," Ford said.

There is evidence the men may have had access to a vehicle, he said.

Ford said it appears the escape may have been plotted by Antonich, who recently found out his ex-wife was about to leave the state with their son. "We're providing her with protection. We think this may be what's behind the whole thing," Ford said.

Woman dead, marine charged

Associated Press

TOKYO — An Okinawan high school student has died of injuries from a hit-and-run accident in which a U.S. Marine has been charged, raising fears of new tensions on the island between residents and the American military.

Yuki Uema, 18, died late Wednesday from head injuries, one week after Marine Cpl. Randall M. Eskridge allegedly struck her motorcycle and fled the scene, police said.

Eskridge, 23, of LaPorte, Ind., was charged Tuesday with hit and run, driving under the influence of alcohol and causing injury through professional negligence. He has not entered a formal plea.

"It can't be forgiven as a mistake," Uema's father, Tomihiro Katsuren, was quoted as saying by The Ryukyu Shimpo, an Okinawan newspaper, as he brought his daughter's body home from the hospital.

Since the accident, there have been demonstrations on Okinawa, about 1,000 miles southwest of Tokyo, demanding that an agreement on handing over U.S. military suspects be reworked.

A 1995 agreement between the United States and Japan requires the U.S. to hand over to Japanese authorities American servicemen suspected of "heinous crimes," such as murder and rape, even before they are officially charged.

That agreement stemmed from the rape of a 12-year-old Okinawan schoolgirl in which three U.S. servicemen were convicted Marine spokesman Capt. Bret Curtis said the hit and run was not a heinous crime as defined by the agreement.

The Marines refused to hand over Eskridge when the Okinawa police demanded it last week.

Although the Japanese government decided not to demand Eskridge's handover before his indictment, Okinawa wanted the handover, Okinawan official Hitoshi Kugai said.

"We view this as a very serious, evil crime," Kugai said today by telephone, adding that many Okinawans don't want the U.S. military to decide what constitutes a heinous crime.The Marines have expressed their condolences to Uema's family.

"This is a tragic, needless loss," said Lt. Gen. Frank Libutti, commander of Marine Corps bases in Japan.

"We know there is little we can say to ease the Uema family's tremendous grief and pain, but we are very sorry," he said.

Bad blood alert issued

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Thousands of people will soon open their mailboxes to find warnings that they may have caught the dangerous liver virus hepatitis C from blood transfusions before 1992. It's the first step in a long-awaited government attack on a hidden epidemic.

Hepatitis C afflicts an estimated 3.9 million Americans, many of whom don't know they're infected because the virus can lurk silently in their bodies. But now that doctors finally have treatments to offer — a handful of drugs — the government is launching a major campaign to get people tested. First on the list are tens of thousands who received transfusions before purity tests of the blood supply began in 1992.

Those people shouldn't panic, stressed Dr. Louis Katz of the Mississippi Valley Regional Blood Center, who advised the government on the campaign.

"The message is: Ask your doctor," he said. Many people will just be carriers of the disease, but for those with active hepatitis C, "we now have something to offer."

A few hospitals, including some in Wisconsin and Minnesota, already have begun tracking down at-risk transfusion recipients. But most were awaiting guidelines from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, issued Thursday, so doctors would have the best advice for worried patients.

Once the hospitals have traced everybody they can, the CDC said Thursday it will launch an advertising campaign next year to urge even more people to be tested.

Hepatitis C, which kills up to 10,000 Americans each year, is the most common blood-borne infection in the United States and the leading reason for liver transplants.

Some people overcome the virus without medical help. But 85 percent develop a chronic, simmering infection they can spread to others. Most of them will suffer at least some liver damage, especially if they also drink alcohol, and 15 percent will develop severe damage.

Sharing intravenous drug needles is the chief source of hepatitis C, causing 60 percent of cases. The CDC recommended testing for:

-Anyone who ever injected drugs — even once as a teenager 20 years ago.

-Hemophiliacs who used clotting factors before 1987, when they became better purified.

-Recipients of organ transplants or blood transfusions before 1992.

An estimated 300,000 Americans were infected from transfusions before 1992, the year that accurate testing of blood donors began.

Today, the risk from transfusions is very small. But only now are doctors tracking down past transfusion recipients to reveal the risk — because it was only in the last year that they figured out how best to treat hepatitis C.

"These people need to be told," said Rep. Christopher Shays, R-Conn., who led a House subcommittee investigation that concluded government notification should have started earlier.

The federal response has been sluggish at best and mute at worst."

Hepatitis C

- infects 3.9 million in U.S.
- most common blood-borne infection
- kills 10,000 in U.S. per year

People Most at Risk

- drug injectors
- hemophiliacs who used clotting factors before 1987
- organ transplants or blood transfusions recipients before 1992

nnell Douglas Corp., actured the plane, rec- in 1997 that airlines ylar blankets with more- material at "the earliest tenance interval."

nistrator Jane Garvey said Wednesday her agency would develop within six months a new test specification for insulation aimed at increasing fire safety.

"In addition to the new standard for testing insulation, the FAA will require that existing materials be replaced with insulation that can pass the new test," she said.

The agency asked Boeing, Airbus, Fokker, other airplane makers and airline representatives "to take advantage of any reasonable maintenance opportunity to replace existing insulation materials."

Peggy Gilligan, the FAA's deputy associate administrator for regulation, told reporters the step expedites the existing test schedule from a year to six months.

She said the number of aircraft involved and the cost of replacing existing insulation are not yet known but will be determined in the process of issuing regulations.

Swissair, which is not registered under the rules that apply to U.S. aircraft "would not necessarily be covered," she said.

Fire tests to this point do not implicate the insulation material itself, she said, but rather the water-resistant material with which the insulation blankets are wrapped.

"Testing has found it is the wrapping material that can propagate the fire," she said. "Fire can move along that material."

She said that insulation material recovered at the crash site of the Swissair jet off Nova Scotia showed no sign of fire or heat damage.

Meanwhile, the Air Transport Association, representing 28 U.S. airlines and air transport companies, called for early technical discussions with the FAA to determine exactly what is involved in the insulation replacement.

"It's difficult if not impossible for the airlines to react until we have been briefed on the technical details," said David A. Fuscus, the association's communications director.

Caroll B. Hallett, the association president, said the record of aircraft fires involving insulation "does not indicate a widespread or immediate safety threat."

Preliminary FAA tests have identified two acceptable materials for the retrofits — fiberglass and a material known as Curlon — which provide high heat resistance when wrapped in a polyimide film.

Garvey said the FAA would exempt any aircraft fitted with fiberglass or Curlon insulation from the new standards being developed.

The work would cost billions if it was ordered at any time other than the heavy maintenance airliners receive each decade or two.

There are 12,000 airplanes in the worldwide fleet. While FAA orders apply only to U.S.-registered planes, foreign authorities usually follow the agency's safety recommendations.

Mylar insulation blankets allowed fires initiated by electrical shorts to spread rapidly aboard three different aircraft from 1993 to 1995. All occurred on the ground and no one was injured.

A fourth incident, work crews started a fire when hot metal chips from an air drill ignited a blankets.

School bill controversial

By LINDSAY PEDERSEN

The State Board of Education and the Utah School Boards Association have been in disagreement since last March on whether or not a bill to organize charter schools is constitutional.

Following the passage of the 1998 Charter Schools Act, which allows the state board of education to organize and monitor eight new charter schools in the state of Utah, the USBA filed what they called "a friendly declatory judgement action" in 3rd District Court on Aug. 7.

The official inquiry asked for the courts to interpret Utah's constitution and decide whether or not it allows the state to govern charter schools.

Charter schools are public schools which focus on improving learning through specialized instruction and encouraging teachers to be innovative. They offer increased administrative independence, control and parental involvement and cannot discriminate on who they enroll. They are usually centered around specialized curriculum such as art, technology, science or music.

The USBA filed their inquiry on the basis that public schools within each community are governed by the residents of that community through the use of local school boards.

They claim that the bill which gives control to the state board violates this right.

"The concept is a good idea, but it can be done in a public school system," said Mossi White, president of the Provo district's school board. "A local school board is the most accessible government unit to the voters."

The inquiry into the constitutional validity of the bill was filed in 3rd District Court Aug. 7.

The bill barely passed in the Senate without a vote to spare and was considered for amendment a number of times.

Italy loses yet another government

Associated Press

ROME — Premier Romano Prodi gave up on his bid to form a new government Thursday, telling Italy's president that his negotiations had failed.

"A heavy burden has been lifted from my shoulders," Prodi said after his meeting with President Oscar Luigi Scalfaro. "But it was a burden I'd have liked to have kept."

Scalfaro had offered the premiership back to Prodi on Tuesday, five days after Prodi's center-left government lost a vote of confidence in the Chamber of Deputies by a single ballot.

Prodi's 2 1/2-year-old government had been Italy's second-longest since World War II.

Lacking the support of his former ally, the far-left Communist party, Prodi had held talks with the centrist party of former President Francesco Cossiga to see if they could work together. Those talks failed Wednesday night.

With Prodi sidelined, Scalfaro can now ask someone else to try to form a government, or he can call early elections.

The president planned to start political party consultations later Thursday aimed at finding a new candidate for premier. They are scheduled to run through midday today.

Many political observers are speculating that Scalfaro might now turn to an apolitical premier to shepherd through the budget and the debut of the euro, the common European currency, on Jan. 1.

He could also opt to give someone a shot at hammering together a new political majority. Speculation on this front centers on Massimo D'Alema, 49, the leader of the Democratic Left, the largest party in Prodi's Olive Tree coalition.

Other potential candidates are Senate speaker Nicola Mancino, 67, or lower house speaker Luciano Violante, 57. Both were elected as part of Olive Tree.

Spy planes to monitor Yugoslav army

Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — NATO signed a deal Thursday with the Yugoslav army, allowing spy planes to monitor the military's compliance in withdrawing troops from Kosovo so ethnic Albanian refugees can return to their villages.

Amid new accusations by Kosovo Albanians of Serb police intimidation, NATO chief Javier Solana said that despite some progress, Yugoslav leader Slobodan Milosevic has a long way to go to meet NATO's Saturday deadline for compliance.

"I would send a very clear message" to Milosevic, Solana said before arriving in Belgrade Thursday evening. "And that is that the solution to the problem is not signing papers but to comply with agreements that have been achieved."

The deal allows for unarmed spy planes to watch over troop withdraws and the return of tens of thousands of ethnic Albanian refugees — demands spelled out in a breakthrough agreement reached earlier this week by Milosevic and U.S. envoy Richard Holbrooke.

International officials also huddled in Paris and Vienna on Thursday to push ahead the assessment process aimed at making sure Milosevic adheres to the agreement.

In Vienna, the 54-nation Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe agreed formally to oversee the 2,000-member "ground verification mission" — unarmed monitors who will roam through Kosovo to make sure terms of the agreement with Holbrooke are being honored.

The mission could cost about $200 million, with the United States, Britain, France, Russia, Italy and Germany assuming most of the burden, Poland's ambassador to the OSCE, Adam Kobieracki, was quoted as saying by the Austria Press Agency.

In Kosovo, the U.N. refugee agency delivered more aid to those displaced by the seven-month crackdown in the secessionist Serbian province, which is populated overwhelmingly by ethnic Albanians.

In the town of Kisna Reka, refugees living in a makeshift camp of 3,000 people in a nearby gully carted off 110-pound sacks of flour, bags of clothing, cooking oil and other supplies delivered by the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees.
